*Road? Gravel? Dirt? No trail at all?
Yeah... The Straggler's got you covered.
Sometimes described as the "mountain-biker's road bike," this steel beauty will get you to your destination no matter the terrain.*

The Cycling Hub of Boulder, Colorado. Must I say anymore? Oh yeah, there's a bar and a coffee shop. Now that I have your attention, let's start from the beginning. Full Cycle has been going strong since its start in 1982. What started as a Co-Op in the back of a grocery store on Pearl Street has blossomed into the leading mountain and commuter bike shop in Boulder. Why don't you just hop on the Goose Creek bike path and check out the Tune-Up taproom and espresso bar for yourself?

After making the move to Colorado, Russel Chandler went on to graduate from CU in 1985. Russel couldn't sit still and hopped around Arizona, California, and New York as the CEO of multiple tech companies and even developing his own geographical information software. Eventually returning to Boulder, Russel decided to settle down as the owner & general manager of Full Cycle. Helping restore what was once a struggling bike shop, Russel has turned the place into a top-notch cycling retail and service center.

MILES JONES

Tell us a bit about yourself, Miles.
What's your story?

I was born on the bottom of a hill and always aspired to get to the top. But I never made it.

What does that mean exactly?

My favorite part of riding is uphill.
That's the truth.

Well said. So what got you into the world of Surly?

The simplicity of it. I went into a shop full of $10,000 bikes and picked the simplest one.

What's your go-to bike?

The Krampus. It's the swiss army knife of bikes.

If you could change one thing about the world, what would it be?

More bike lanes. The world would be a happier place if we could get more people riding.

WHATS UP WITH YOU?

Take matters into your own hands.

Recreate this Intelligencer and let the world know what's special about your Surly community.
